

“Research is one of the three cornerstones of the Faculty of Arts and Philosophy, next to education and the provision of services”

The Faculty of Arts and Philosophy of Ghent University is home to approximately 520 scholars, of whom about 160 are tenured staff members. In our faculty annually some 60 doctoral degrees are obtained and some 600 peer-reviewed scholarly articles are published.

MISSION

The Faculty of Arts and Philosophy wants to be a national and international player in the field of scientific research. Through its departments and research groups the faculty wants to contribute to the scientific exploration and further development of its academic disciplines. Therefore, the faculty sets the necessary conditions and strives to disclose the results of its research to third parties and to integrate them into its own teaching, research and service.

RESEARCH PLATFORM

We make our research visible to the outside world through our faculty research platform containing all the information about our researchers, research projects and research groups.

Doctoral Schools

Flourishing Doctoral Schools support the PhD students during their research process and provide extensive training opportunities.

Interdisciplinary PhDs

PhD students may also opt for a PhD with an interdisciplinary character that results in a combined PhD degree, under the joint supervision of two or more UGent supervisors belonging to different disciplines.

Joint PhDs

PhD students can do part of their research at Ghent University and another part at another university. Ghent University makes it possible to award PhD degrees with other universities. Such degrees may take the form of a joint doctorate or a double doctorate (joint degree or double degree). The Ghent University Special Research Fund can offer funding to foreign students who qualify for this.

VISITING RESEARCHERS

Our faculty is committed to international and national knowledge exchange. Post-doctoral researchers and senior academics are invited to join our research groups for several months, e.g. in the framework of a specific research project or for the purpose of a more structural cooperation between researchers. The Research Foundation Flanders (FWO), Ghent University and our faculty offer various funding options.
