EU-Africa relations in transition

Edited by Gerrit Faber

Jan Orbie, Ghent University, Belgium

The Economic Partnership Agreements between the European Union and the Africa, Caribbean, and Pacific (ACP) countries have drastically restructured Europe's trade architecture towards the third world. This volume examines the consequences of EPAs for development in sub-Saharan Africa (SSA).

Routledge Studies in the European Economy

The widening and deepening of the European Union (EU) has led to a considerable interest in the European economy. Europe is now, without doubt, one of the most significant areas of the world economy, rivalling North America and East Asia. However, the next decade is clearly going to witness further significant changes in Europe, both inside and outside the EU. This series provides the economic background essential to understanding such changes. It includes studies of individual countries and wider regional studies.

Starting from the observation that the establishment of free trade as such will substantially impact upon economic development, the different contributions focus on the potential contribution of non-traditional aspects of EPAs. More specifically, the authors analyze the role of Aid for Trade schemes, regulatory integration issues and broader foreign policy considerations. How can these non-market access aspects stimulate development in Africa, and how have they been addressed in the EPAs? In short, this brings us to the question whether the 'light version EPAs' as they currently stand are a missed chance or a blessing in disguise?
